

The left image is the place you would imagine a knife, a kitchen. I imagine it placed on top of the cutting board. In the second image, the public space I chose was Krentzman quad located on Northeastern's campus. I imagine an extremely large knife sculpture with the point buried into the grass. This gives alludes to the grass patch being a knife block, the normal place knives are stored. I chose Krentzman quad because this is an area where many people pass each day and even lay on the ground to relax, putting a knife there would add an element of danger that completely juxtaposes this idea.
